La segunda fiesta de chilis era en Piedmont Biofuels en el 18 de Octubre. Habia ejemplos de comida de chilis de muchos restaurantes, cerveza y vino, y un chance de comer chilis de varios granjas y considerar la calidad. Notable era el ramo de tulipan esculpado de chilis por la General Store Café. ■ Second Annual Pepper Festival was held at Pittsboro Biofuels on Oct. 18. There were samples from several restaurants of pepper dishes, wine and beer, and a chance to taste peppers from various farms and rate them for quality. Notable was the bouquet of "tulips" carved from peppers at the General Store Cafe.

a global scale, contributing to the loss of biodiversity within our agricultural food systems.

The two-day conference entitled Crucial Cuisine: Putting Rare Breeds Back on the Table is packed with educational sessions and insights geared towards farmers, food aficionados, agricultural educators, historians, conservationists and others interested in the topics of biodiversity and sustainability.

In addition, participants will have the opportunity to attend A Rare-A-Fare dinner featuring rare breeds. "The theme of this year's conference is Crucial Cuisine and the goal is to get many of these breeds back onto the American dinner table," said Jeannette Beranger, research and technical program manager for ALBC.

Conference details and online registration can be found on the ALBC web site www.albc-usa.org. For additional information, contact Jennifer Kendall at 919.542.5704.
